About the Department:

It cannot be ignored that English plays an important role in whole of the nation to a thread and functions in a way what the (18) eighteen constitutionally recognized languages. It is the language that opens the gate of employability, opportunity and vision for the youth. The department of English in our college was started in 2010 and offers UG and PG Courses. It comprises of a team of highly qualified and experienced faculty to impart quality education. In conformity with the vision and mission of our college the department of English has moulded itself with positive aspirants to cope-up with the latest trend prevalent in the national and international level and need-based teaching of English. Since the situation for employability demands a good command over the communication skill of the students, the department of English gives priority to this. The department will be witnessed both the qualitative and quantitative improvement in all fields. English strives to maintain its existence. The English Department will emerge and will be committed to teach Literature and Critical thinking, continuing participation in research program and Academic program outreach as a critical part of what we do.

About the Seminar:

Postcolonial literature

Postcolonial literature is the literature by people from formerly colonized countries. It exists on all continents except Antarctica. Postcolonial literature often addresses the problems and consequences of the decolonization of a country, especially questions relating to the political and cultural independence of formerly subjugated people, and themes such as racialism and colonialism. A range of literary theory has evolved around the subject. It addresses the role of literature in perpetuating and challenging what postcolonial critic Edward Said refers to as cultural imperialism. Before the term "postcolonial literature" gained currency, "commonwealth literature" was used to refer to writing in English from countries belonging to the British Commonwealth. with colonialism's legacy. They advocated for its inclusion in literary curricula, hitherto dominated by the British canon. However, the succeeding generation of postcolonial critics, many of whom belonged to the post-structuralism philosophical tradition, took issue with the Commonwealth label for separating non-British writing from "English" literature produced in England. They also suggested that texts in this category had a short-sighted view of imperialism's impact. Other terms used for the writing in English from former British colonies include terms that designate a national corpus of writing such as Australian or Canadian Literature; "English Literature Other than British and American," "New Literatures in English," "International Literature in English;" and "World Literatures." These have, however, been dismissed either as too vague or too inaccurate to represent the vast body of dynamic writing emerging from the colonies both during and after colonial rule. The term "colonial" and "postcolonial" continue to be used for writing emerging during and after colonial rule respectively.

MESSAGE

I am immensely happy to inform that, one day National Level Seminar on “Paradigm Shift in Indian Banking Sector” is organized by Post Graduate Department of Commerce with Computer Application, Syed Ammal Arts & Science College, Ramanathapuram, on 16th March 2018. The landscape of India’s financial sector is changing widely. Banking adopting differentiates channels and technology could be enabling a multi-fold increase of reach in rural and remote areas. Coupled with the emergence of a new class of bank, the small and payments banks, one of the biggest impacts of technology adoption is rapidly accelerating financial inclusion by making last-mile access more cost effective and is expanding the reach of banking to the unbanked. The Pradhan Mantri Jan - Dhan Yojana has been an outstanding example. Direct transfer to the bank accounts coupled with the range of services, envisioned in the Government’s Digital India programme will drive customer adoption and promote a savings culture. With demonetization, more people are depositing money at banks which means the banks will have more liquid funds and money to lend, slashing their deposit rates drastically.

Indian customers gradually prefer online services particularly after post - demonetization because of convenience, cost saving and swiftness of online transactions. Online transactions and data are not free from being attacked or manipulated. Cases of fraudulent cash withdrawals, account information hacking, data theft and credit/debit card scams have remarkable association with electronic systems in banking business. Today, maximum information being online, are highly susceptible to be attacked by cyber criminals. Cyber fraud cases in banks have become quite common which cause heavy loss of money to the customers every year.

The present seminar covers corporate governance and banks, recent trends in retail banking, e-banking, mobile banking, green banking, global banking and CRM banking. I am confident that deliberations of the seminar would greatly benefit the research scholars among students and faculty members in Commerce, Commerce with Computer Application and Business Management Programmes. I hearty congratulate to the coordinator of the seminar Mr. K. Rajamahendran and all his faculty colleagues for their team work in organizing this event.

I wish the National Seminar a grand success

Message

Nowadays, banking sector is seen as a catalyst in economic growth of a country. The recognition of banking, as a tool for all inclusive growth by economists, financial planners, reformist etc. has made it an important sector in the Government's planning of economic growth. The banking sector in India is therefore witnessing tremendous changes because of political, social and economic changes that are taking place domestically and internationally. Indian banking sector has witnessed a paradigm shift in its operation with initiation of reform measures since from 1991. The changed operating environment underpinned by globalization, deregulation and advances in information technology has resulted intensified competitive ambience in the sector. Further, deregulation of interest rate and opening up of the financial sector made Indian banking sector competitive.

Today banks are wooing existing customers and prospective customers by offering new facilities, products, and services in order to retain/increase their customer base in market. The customer of today is not what he was yesterday. Today the customer is more knowledgeable, demanding, analytical and aware of his rights. It is therefore a challenging task before the banking sector to revisit their entire working modules, up gradation of skills, technology, and policies so that they are competent to withstand the international competitive environment in future. The growing concern about the improvement in service quality can be the mantra for survival. Banks are putting their best face forward for improving service quality. With a view to attain better service quality, technology is rapidly transforming the banking industry and expanding its ability to reach the unbanked. Under the backdrop, the present seminar entitled "Paradigm Shift in Indian Banking Sector" has been undertaken with a view to examine the recent trends in Indian banking industry and customer services rendered by the banks.

I congratulate the coordinator and organizers of this seminar for their valuable efforts to conduct the seminar in successful manner.

About the Department

The department of Zoology was established in the year 2016. Already our department completed three state level seminars and one national seminar. The students of the department have actively participated in various symposia, seminar, workshop, conferences and presented papers. The fully qualified faculty members of our department are actively engaging the students in teaching and research.

Purpose of the seminar

Taxonomy and systematics are the sciences concerned with the identification, description and classification of organisms. Exact organism identifications are of the utmost importance not only in building knowledge of the biodiversity and to preserve wildlife but also for monitoring changes in the biological environment. Though taxonomy and systematics form the actual basis for all biological sciences, taxonomy is on the wane and skilled taxonomists are rapidly decreasing in number leading to serious questions in scientific community concerning the preservation of this knowledge.

Further, being poorer than the developed countries, the biodiversity rich tropical developing countries have few trained personnel to assess the biological wealth in their countries, identify the threats and conservation needs and formulate effective management strategies for sustaining the benefits of biodiversity on a long term basis.

Area focused

- Collection and preservation of fishes
- Ornamental fish culture/ Water quality
- Aqua culture/ Seaweed research
- Disease management/EVS/Biodiversity

Call for papers

In this connection we invite research papers on any one of the above mentioned areas. Selected papers will be published in the souvenir released with ISBN by the college management and seminar proceedings.

Purpose of the Seminar

Microbes are the disease causing agents. These microorganisms are not visible to the naked eye and are visible under microscope. After the discovery of microscopes, the general nature of disease causing microbes, pathogenesis, epidemiology, lab diagnosis, prevention and treatment processes were developed. This is one of the health oriented field in microbiology. This is called as medical microbiology or physician oriented microbiology. The major concern of medical microbiologists is to isolate and identify microorganisms from clinical specimens. This task will help the physician in the diagnosis and proper treatment of the infectious diseases. The treatment of diseases with a chemical substance is known as chemotherapy. In the 20th century due to the miraculous medical developments, antibacterial, antiviral and antifungal drugs have been developed to give treatments to all the infectious diseases. Now-a-days the diseases caused by microbes are too many, even though the development of medical microbiology has been playing a very prominent role in curing the diseases. In this juncture, our department of microbiology in collaboration with ISCA has proposed to organize a National level seminar on "Infectious Diseases and medical development" for the betterment of students and the public on 10th January 2020.

Area focused:

1. Microbes and diseases
2. Bacterial Diseases and the treatment with antibacterial drugs.
3. Fungal diseases and antifungal drugs.
4. Viral diseases and antiviral drugs.
5. Mechanism of action of antimicrobial drugs.

Intimation and call for Papers
(December 25th – January 6th)

In this connection we invite research papers on any one of the above mentioned areas. Selected papers will be published in the souvenir released by the college management.

The Importance of the Seminar

The seminar will provide a platform for enriching the mathematical flavor and culture in various field of Arts, Science, Engineering and Technology. The main objective of this seminar is to provide impetus and motivation for further study of research work and direction for inter disciplinary mathematical field. We aim at bringing to gather academicians, researchers and people using mathematics in industry and exchange views and ideas. This will facilitate to discuss future prospects in the field of Arts and Science, Engineering applications of mathematics. The general objective is to create awareness among the students, teachers and research scholars about the beauty of various real life and industrial applications of mathematics efforts will be made to publish reviewed papers in the seminar proceedings.

Guidelines for Submission of Papers
