About the Seminar:

Postcolonial literature

Postcolonial literature is the literature by people from formerly colonized countries. It exists on all continents except Antarctica. Postcolonial literature often addresses the problems and consequences of the decolonization of a country, especially questions relating to the political and cultural independence of formerly subjugated people, and themes such as racialism and colonialism. A range of literary theory has evolved around the subject. It addresses the role of literature in perpetuating and challenging what postcolonial critic Edward Said refers to as cultural imperialism. Before the term "postcolonial literature" gained currency, "commonwealth literature" was used to refer to writing in English from countries belonging to the British Commonwealth. with colonialism's legacy. They advocated for its inclusion in literary curricula, hitherto dominated by the British canon. However, the succeeding generation of postcolonial critics, many of whom belonged to the post-structuralism philosophical tradition, took issue with the Commonwealth label for separating non-British writing from "English" literature produced in England. They also suggested that texts in this category had a short-sighted view of imperialism's impact. Other terms used for the writing in English from former British colonies include terms that designate a national corpus of writing such as Australian or Canadian Literature; "English Literature Other than British and American," "New Literatures in English," "International Literature in English;" and "World Literatures." These have, however, been dismissed either as too vague or too inaccurate to represent the vast body of dynamic writing emerging from the colonies both during and after colonial rule. The term "colonial" and "postcolonial" continue to be used for writing emerging during and after colonial rule respectively.

MESSAGE

I am immensely happy to inform that, one day National Level Seminar on “Paradigm Shift in Indian Banking Sector” is organized by Post Graduate Department of Commerce with Computer Application, Syed Ammal Arts & Science College, Ramanathapuram, on 16th March 2018. The landscape of India’s financial sector is changing widely. Banking adopting differentiates channels and technology could be enabling a multi-fold increase of reach in rural and remote areas. Coupled with the emergence of a new class of bank, the small and payments banks, one of the biggest impacts of technology adoption is rapidly accelerating financial inclusion by making last-mile access more cost effective and is expanding the reach of banking to the unbanked. The Pradhan Mantri Jan - Dhan Yojana has been an outstanding example. Direct transfer to the bank accounts coupled with the range of services, envisioned in the Government’s Digital India programme will drive customer adoption and promote a savings culture. With demonetization, more people are depositing money at banks which means the banks will have more liquid funds and money to lend, slashing their deposit rates drastically.

Indian customers gradually prefer online services particularly after post - demonetization because of convenience, cost saving and swiftness of online transactions. Online transactions and data are not free from being attacked or manipulated. Cases of fraudulent cash withdrawals, account information hacking, data theft and credit/debit card scams have remarkable association with electronic systems in banking business. Today, maximum information being online, are highly susceptible to be attacked by cyber criminals. Cyber fraud cases in banks have become quite common which cause heavy loss of money to the customers every year.

The present seminar covers corporate governance and banks, recent trends in retail banking, e-banking, mobile banking, green banking, global banking and CRM banking. I am confident that deliberations of the seminar would greatly benefit the research scholars among students and faculty members in Commerce, Commerce with Computer Application and Business Management Programmes. I hearty congratulate to the coordinator of the seminar Mr. K. Rajamahendran and all his faculty colleagues for their team work in organizing this event.

I wish the National Seminar a grand success

Message

Nowadays, banking sector is seen as a catalyst in economic growth of a country. The recognition of banking, as a tool for all inclusive growth by economists, financial planners, reformist etc. has made it an important sector in the Government's planning of economic growth. The banking sector in India is therefore witnessing tremendous changes because of political, social and economic changes that are taking place domestically and internationally. Indian banking sector has witnessed a paradigm shift in its operation with initiation of reform measures since from 1991. The changed operating environment underpinned by globalization, deregulation and advances in information technology has resulted intensified competitive ambience in the sector. Further, deregulation of interest rate and opening up of the financial sector made Indian banking sector competitive.

Today banks are wooing existing customers and prospective customers by offering new facilities, products, and services in order to retain/increase their customer base in market. The customer of today is not what he was yesterday. Today the customer is more knowledgeable, demanding, analytical and aware of his rights. It is therefore a challenging task before the banking sector to revisit their entire working modules, up gradation of skills, technology, and policies so that they are competent to withstand the international competitive environment in future. The growing concern about the improvement in service quality can be the mantra for survival. Banks are putting their best face forward for improving service quality. With a view to attain better service quality, technology is rapidly transforming the banking industry and expanding its ability to reach the unbanked. Under the backdrop, the present seminar entitled "Paradigm Shift in Indian Banking Sector" has been undertaken with a view to examine the recent trends in Indian banking industry and customer services rendered by the banks.

I congratulate the coordinator and organizers of this seminar for their valuable efforts to conduct the seminar in successful manner.

About the College

Syed Ammal Arts and Science College is run by the Syed Ammal Educational Trust established by the father of Ramanathapuram Dr.E.M.Abdullah in the name of his beloved mother Syed Ammal. He was a famous doctor, a well known philanthropist and a social worker. Dr.Abdullah was deeply interested in nation building activities such as providing medical assistance and uplifting the educational status of the poor and down trodden people of this backward district. For this purpose, he has started the Syed Ammal High School in the year 1964 and it was upgraded to higher secondary school. More over in order to ameliorate the standard of English knowledge to the weaker sections of this area, he has also started the Syed Ammal Matriculation School in the year 1976.

Following the foot prints of Dr.Abdullah, the management committee has started Syed Ammal Arts and Science College in 2010 with strength of 310 students in the vast area of about 56 acres on the east coast road between Ramanathapuram and Devipattinam. Now the strength is 2000 with 90 experienced Teachers. This college is a co-educational institution offering 13 under graduate courses and 4 post graduate courses. This institution has successfully completed 6 years of excellent academic service and now it is getting ready for NAAC accreditation.

About the Department

The department of Zoology was established in the year 2016. Already our department completed three state level seminars and one national seminar. The students of the department have actively participated in various symposia, seminar, workshop, conferences and presented papers. The fully qualified faculty members of our department are actively engaging the students in teaching and research.

Purpose of the seminar

Taxonomy and systematics are the sciences concerned with the identification, description and classification of organisms. Exact organism identifications are of the utmost importance not only in building knowledge of the biodiversity and to preserve wildlife but also for monitoring changes in the biological environment. Though taxonomy and systematics form the actual basis for all biological sciences, taxonomy is on the wane and skilled taxonomists are rapidly decreasing in number leading to serious questions in scientific community concerning the preservation of this knowledge.

Further, being poorer than the developed countries, the biodiversity rich tropical developing countries have few trained personnel to assess the biological wealth in their countries, identify the threats and conservation needs and formulate effective management strategies for sustaining the benefits of biodiversity on a long term basis.

Area focused

- Collection and preservation of fishes
- Ornamental fish culture/ Water quality
- Aqua culture/ Seaweed research
- Disease management/EVS/Biodiversity

Purpose of the Seminar

Microbes are the disease causing agents. These microorganisms are not visible to the naked eye and are visible under microscope. After the discovery of microscopes, the general nature of disease causing microbes, pathogenesis, epidemiology, lab diagnosis, prevention and treatment processes were developed. This is one of the health oriented field in microbiology. This is called as medical microbiology or physician oriented microbiology. The major concern of medical microbiologists is to isolate and identify microorganisms from clinical specimens. This task will help the physician in the diagnosis and proper treatment of the infectious diseases. The treatment of diseases with a chemical substance is known as chemotherapy. In the 20th century due to the miraculous medical developments, antibacterial, antiviral and antifungal drugs have been developed to give treatments to all the infectious diseases. Now-a-days the diseases caused by microbes are too many, even though the development of medical microbiology has been playing a very prominent role in curing the diseases. In this juncture, our department of microbiology in collaboration with ISCA has proposed to organize a National level seminar on "Infectious Diseases and medical development" for the betterment of students and the public on 10th January 2020.

Area focused:

1. Microbes and diseases

About the College

Syed Ammal Arts and Science College is run by the Syed Ammal Educational Trust established by the father of Ramanathapuram, Dr.E.M.Abdullah in the name of his beloved mother Syed Ammal. He was a famous doctor, a well known philanthropist and a social worker. Dr.E.M.Abdullah was deeply interested in nation building activities such as providing medical assistance and uplifting the educational status of the poor and down trodden people of this backward district. For this purpose, he has started the Syed Ammal High School in the year 1964 and it was upgraded to higher secondary school. Moreover in order to ameliorate the standard of English knowledge to the weaker sections of this area, he has also started the Syed Ammal Matriculation School in the year 1976.

Following the foot prints of Dr.E.M.Abdullah, the management committee has started Syed Ammal Arts and Science College in 2010 with a strength of 310 students in the vast area of about 56 acres on the east coast road between Ramanathapuram and Devipattinam. Now the strength is 2450 with 116 experienced Teachers. This college is a co-educational institution offering 15 under graduate courses and 5 post graduate courses. About the Department

The department of Chemistry was established in the year 2011. Already our department has conducted a one day seminar on collaboration with department of Microbiology. Our department also organized two state level seminars in the previous years. The students of the department have actively participated in various symposia, seminar, workshop, conferences and presented papers. The experienced faculty members of our department are actively engaging the students in teaching and research.

Purpose of the seminar

Drug discovery plays a vital role in the identification, characterization, effectiveness and application of drugs. The recent trends in the research of drug designing and its development is very much helpful for scientist, health care professional, pharmacologist and many other experts associated with medical field.

Applications of electrochemical techniques are largely useful in many ways like fabrication of membrane cells, energy production and biological activities etc.

By considering the use of drug designing and the various application of electrochemistry in various fields, the department of chemistry is very much interested and propose to conduct a one day international seminar on emerging trends in chemistry on Friday 24.01.2020.

Conference Report

Introduction

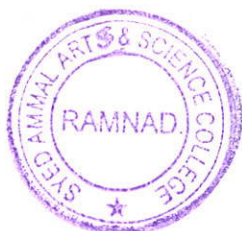

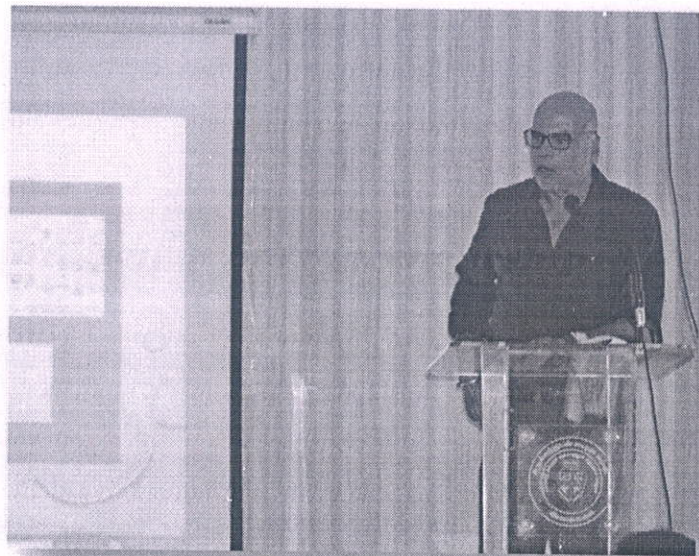

Changes in the business practices are ever expected and never in evitable at global level. Today's global business environment, characterized by rapid technological changes and increased automatically which has swept away industry and market conditions such as Environment requires flexible strategic solution that respond quickly to these rapid changes. So, in order to bring awareness about changing global business Environment.

Business innovation benefits not only consumers but also business owners. Innovative ideas and strategies have proven, time and again, to be both socially inspiring and financially lucrative. Just look at two of America's tech giants, Facebook and Apple, which have grown by leaps and bounds through innovation. While the benefits are there for everyone to see, there are many companies that have difficulty innovating. This is because business innovation has some challenges. Knowing these challenges can help businesses to develop innovative strategies and ideas that will not only boost their financial standing but also give them an edge over the competition.

Plenary Session I: Innovation in Entrepreneurship

Prof. Y. HARIPRASAD REDDY began the session to discuss entrepreneurship and innovation, a topic which is crucial for economic and social development. The contribution of entrepreneurship and innovation to economic prosperity has grown with the shift of the global economy towards a mode of production in which knowledge has become a key input. The challenges of the knowledge economy originally interested the most advanced economies, but are now critical to growth in emerging economies as well. Vigorous entrepreneurship and SME development are among the most important conditions for successfully meeting the challenges.

The growing importance of knowledge as a factor of production means that innovation is ever more related to creativity, and the latter fits better of entrepreneurs and small firms. To remain with the example of mobile phones, the rise of smart-phones has allowed creative people and firms to develop and sell new applications, from games to software allowing free communication.

Business innovation has become increasingly open and collaborative, as opposed to the traditional 'closed' in-house innovation model of the R&D labs of large corporations. This 'distributed' model creates new opportunities for small firms, which can benefit from participation in knowledge-based partnerships and networks. This is reflected in current innovation policies that rely a great deal on network policies such as cluster development programmes, collaborative research agreements, university-industry labour mobility, new non-technological forms of innovation such as new marketing strategies and organisational improvements that do not require large investment in R&D enable small firms to participate more actively in the innovation process, enhancing their contribution to productivity.

However, the picture is not so idyllic and thinking that all new and small firms are equally innovative would be misleading. Significant barriers hinder the innovation of the average small firm, including access to finance, poor management and entrepreneurial skills, lack of qualified personnel, short-term perspective, limited awareness of innovation needs, etc. Government policies are therefore needed and these should be based on a sound understanding of how new and small firms innovate. The new firm experience suggests that what makes these firms different from large corporations in their 'road to innovation' is their strong emphasis on collaboration. Small businesses rely more often than large and established companies on co-operation with other organisations such as suppliers, customers, universities, and public agencies for their innovative activities. Knowledge spillovers, both from public research organisations and other firms, strongly contribute to the innovativeness of small enterprises.

Plenary Session 2: Innovative Business Strategies

"Anyone in a leadership position should be responsible for finding innovative solutions to problems that fit his or her pay grade"

PRINCIPAL
Syed Ammal Arts and Science College,
KOOTTAMPULI, Pullankudi Post,
Ramanathapuram Dist.

Dr.S.SENBAGANATHAN, Start with specific problems that demand novel solutions. Every day, thousands of entrepreneurs pitch their startups to venture capitalists. Almost always, the first question the entrepreneurs hear is: "What problem does your new business idea solve?" This is because venture capitalists know that all innovations are born as a novel solution to an important problem. But this is true for big companies, too. For example, Ford's moving assembly line solved the problem of how to democratize the automobile; the iPod and iPhone became the unexpected answer to making Apple's iMac the center of consumers' digital lives; and the first cloud computing service solved the problem of how to generate profit from Amazon's huge army of servers supporting an unprofitable e-commerce business.

A related issue at many large companies is that people are asked to innovate for problems that are above their pay grade. This creates a situation in which ideas are coming to, rather than from, the leaders who are ultimately responsible for implementing those ideas. And that dooms your company to incrementalism, because it's only natural for a leader to want proof financial, market, or otherwise that someone else's idea will work before they agree to support it. Knowing that, people will bring you only those ideas for which doing NPV analysis or customer research is possible. These might include a better car, but not an entirely different way of building it; or a better MP3 or mobile phone, but not one that changes the way music is bought and sold; or how to make your server farm more energy-efficient, but not how to turn it into a profit-making juggernaut. None of these innovations could have been proven with financial analysis, market research, or anything else.

Plenary Session 3: Corporate Social Responsibility

Prof.C.VETHIRAJAN

Started his session with definition, Corporate social responsibility (CSR) can be simply and broadly defined as the ethical role of the corporation in society. The aim of CSR is to increase long-term profits and shareholder trust through positive public relations and high ethical standards to reduce business and legal risk by taking responsibility for corporate actions. It isn't enough for companies to generate a profit and merely meet the letter of the law in their business operations. CSR strategies encourage the company to make a positive impact on the environment and stakeholders—that is, all of the parties who have a stake in the performance and output of the corporation. Stakeholders include the company's employees, unions, investors, suppliers, consumers, local and national governments, and communities that may be affected by corporate activities such as construction, manufacturing, and pollution. For some companies, CSR means manufacturing their products in a way that doesn't harm the environment and protects the consumer from potentially hazardous materials. One such company that has staked its reputation on ethical manufacturing is LUSH Cosmetics.

Consumers are demanding more from the businesses that get their hard-earned money. Businesses that are perceived as valuing more than the "bottom line" are gaining favor with the buying public. Consumers—especially those in North America—are likely to vote with their wallets against companies whose social and environmental performance is poor. Forty-two percent of North American consumers reported having punished socially irresponsible companies by not buying their products. For example, Starbucks has faced the animosity of anti-globalization rioters. It has been accused of mistreating its staff, avoiding corporate tax, and even wasting water. As the following video shows, the coffee company has been forced to react to increasing consumer pressure. Not all companies approach CSR in the same way. Their approach depends upon their resources, available assets, and corporate culture. In addition, some companies perceive more benefit from one type of CSR than another. The personal beliefs and priorities of senior management/ownership can also influence the company's approach to social responsibility. Below are some different approaches to CSR.

KOOTTAMPULI, Pullankudi Post,

Sustainability is a concept derived from environmentalism; it originally referred to the ability of a society or company to continue to operate without compromising the planet's environmental condition in the future. In other words, a sustainable corporation is one that can sustain its current activities without adding to the world's environmental problems. Sustainability is therefore a very challenging goal, and many environmentalists maintain that no corporation today operates sustainably, since all use energy (leading to the gradual depletion of fossil fuels while emitting greenhouse gases) and all produce waste products like garbage and industrial chemicals. Whether or not true sustainability will be attainable anytime in the near future, the development and promotion of sustainability strategies has become virtually an obsession of most large corporations today, as their websites will attest in their inevitable reference to the corporation's sincere commitment to sustainability and responsible environmental practices. No corporation or corporate executive today will be heard to say that they do not really care about the environment.
